Caution: Illegally Copying Software Can Be Dangerous

A little more than 35 percent of all business software in use today is pirated. That's not only surprising, it's dangerous. If the software doesn't work, forget calling for product support.

Stolen software may also infect your computer with a deadly virus that can ruin important work and records.

Selling or copying software without authorization is also against the law. The civil and criminal penalties are severe. They include imprisonment of up to five years and fines of up to $250,000 or both.

If you suspect the sale or use of pirated software, you can call the Business Software Alliance hotline at (800) 688-2721.

Remember, software theft affects every taxpayer because it damages an industry that plays an important role in our economy. Software theft stifles creativity, destroys the incentive for innovation, and clogs the growth of an industry that creates a lot of jobs.

a Personal Story

ions such as your Social Security number, your driver's license number or your state's initials. This could help the authorities identify and return items if they are lost or stolen.

• If you own unique items such as antique jewelry or original works of art, it's wise to have them appraised to establish their value. Work with your insurance agent to determine the right kind of coverage for these special items. In the event of a loss, this will help ensure a settlement compensate with their value.

• Photographs can be an important supplement to your written inventory, so use a camera you're comfortable with.
